“ i remember just a month or two ago before you died, we were sitting on your back porch while you were smoking a cigarette and i decided to push away my fear and come out to you and bisexual. i sat next to you and began to tell you about how i had been dating my best friend for 3 years. you listened to me go on about how nervous i was to bring this up to you even though i knew you had no resentment for gay people or of that community. the wave of love and care i felt in those seconds when you explained that nothing i could ever do or say could make you love me less. when you said you didnt care and that you would always love me for who i was made me genuinely tear up a bit. im so glad i got to express my true self to you before you left. it was so hard thanksgiving knowing that we cant gather to your house like we always had. i know its gonna be even worse on christmas without your traditional christmas morning breakfast. you always tried your hardest to make it a magical day for everyone. though nana may be doing the breakfast for christmas this year, it just wont be the same as when you made it. We miss you gigi. Love, your gret granddaughter kylee. :)
