“ You know how they say that everyone enters your life for a reason? I wholeheartedly believe that to be true. I have met some of the most amazing people who will have a lasting impact on my life. But the person who has changed my life the most was you, han. I never had the opportunity to tell you how much your friendship truly meant to me, so I want to take a few seconds to tell you. You were the person in middle school who managed to brighten my day. You were the person who took the time to understand me and really get to know me. You did not judge, and you did not bully. You were the perfect friend. And in high school, you continued to be one of the most whole-hearted people I had ever met. You were loyal, kind, and loving. You were a true friend. And your death does not change any of those things. You focused on others rather than wallowing in your own self-pity. You were the epitome of strength. And, while I am sure there were times when you did in fact wallow and get frustrated, you never showed that. You were the type of person I wish I could be; and I continue to attempt to live as you did. I can only hope that in honoring your memory, I can preserve the friendship we had. i'll see you soon han, luv u bae

“ Hey han i know you will never see this but im just going to say it. It's been nearly 1 month since the day I found out I'd never see or hear from you again. March 12 was the day I realized I had to take on this crazy world without you by my side. Death hits like a train, even though it takes forever to actually realize that the person who you were so close with, is gone and they're never coming back. All I have now are memories of us. Photos, a few videos just to hear your voice. You left this Earth for God knows what reason, but he took you way too soon. No sign in sight. Nobody could have seen this coming. It's true what they say... the good die young. For what? Nobody will ever know the answer to that. I don't think you understand just how much happiness you brought to so many people. You could light up any room you walked in and everybody knew who you were. Nobody was a stranger to you, either. You could walk up to someone and act like you knew them forever. Everyone was a friend to you. I know you visit me and give me signs, big or little, to tell me that you're okay, but I still catch myself at the most random of times hearing your infectious laugh and voice. Maybe it's your bright smile that lights my phone up when I don't have a notification coming through. Everyone said it gets easier, but I don't believe that in the slightest because 1 month later, I still fall to my knees and ask God, "Why her"? Time flew. It went from minutes, to hours. Hours to days. Days to weeks. Weeks to a mont. Next thing i noticed i have spent a whole month without you. I feel like I've needed my best friend more than ever and you're the reason why I need you. I want you to keep going i want you to win even though i cant be there to celbrete with you. Be the light that you want to see in the world. I will see you soon. I love you, bebe.

“ Hannah was always the happiest person I knew. From the day we met in middle school, to the last day i ever spoke to her. The last time i saw her, I blew her a kiss and told her I loved her the same way I always did. She blew hers back and said I love you too, our little getting-off-work tradition. I still blow kisses at her pictures and I imagine she blows them back. I miss her more than anything. She was an angel on earth way before she ever left. I can't wait to see you again, Han. I love you always <3
