“ We had suffered some casualties, but we were all still ready to fight. The sky was dark as if the bellows of hell loomed above us. We held the line side by side until reinforcements came. He rallied us to him for one final push of our line and broke through the enemies line like we were chopping wood. They had retreated back from the bridge. He was alone on that bridge between the enemy army and our line. He stood atop the bridge and all alone advanced toward the enemy's defenses. From his mouth spewed forth the most ravenous blood curdling scream and advanced with nothing but his dagger for he had lost both of his main weapons. His bright red and yellow tunic, with the meridian coat of black and white rustled in the howling wind. He advanced without fear. His voice loud and feral. The glint of his helmet shining in the firelight

To our shock and amazement, the enemy's entire line took a step backward. They gave this knight a second thought one versus a hundred or more. He was proof that OUR knight would never go gently into death, he would hold himself high and announce his coming that would shake the foundations of the very gods themselves at his arrival. He was unafraid. He was braver than many. He was honor and glory personified. He was my brother. My father. My friend. Stand watch until I join you...

“ I met Mike at hobby store, and we started talking about model trains. I had just recently joined SWARM which is the local model train club. Mike joined and we both became active in the club. Mike was very knowledgeable about the hobby, and I would go over to his house, and we would work on trains together, I learned alot from Mike and we became good friends. Mike built some train layout modules and would set them up at model trains shows.. He was always willing to help people with their model trains. He will truly be missed as a good friend and fellow hobbyist!
