“ In the three years I lived next door, Ryan became a good friend. We sat outside and talked a lot. He had a harder life than I do, but he always said I had it worse. I told him life is relative and a matter of perspective. His view was that he didn't have it as bad as others. He was over checking on me all the time after I lost my left leg last November. I would catch him bringing up my garbage can or the mail. He was always watching out for everyone he could. Sometimes he would come to play his guitar and show me the latest song he learned. He loved to sing as well. Ryan, I'm sorry I missed saying goodbye, I'll always have to live with that. Dialysis made me very sick or I would've been there today. I'll miss our talks and your stories. I'll miss you. Walk slow to the gates of heaven, I'll see you when I get there. Love you my friend.
