“ My Senior year, she was my English teacher, at Cholla, 89-90. She gave us the freedom to choose our own books to read over the semester. A few times a week, we would all gather in a circle and discuss our books with each other and answer questions sge would give us. I enjoyed reading already, but she really made it a life-long love. I looked forward to that class each day, because I knew there was no pressure, no tests, only our own thoughts and opinions on whatever the book was that we, individually selected. Giving us that voice and choice was a gift, especially in high school. Rest in love.
